TODAY . . . I live in Barracks!

*But we're planning
our home of TOMORROW!*

Yes, nothing can stop the plan of peace. That of the writer of our time among scientific advances, many improvements, many now about to sweeten the peace. The home of tomorrow will be a better home more comfortable, more convenient, more livable.

Musicalness, because of its long life, because it is colour full and easy to chant, will be used as the basic flooring for every room in the house; will also be used for lattice tops, splash areas, working surfaces. And Minutemen will be useful for walls and ceilings. Whether you are planning the building of a new home or the renovation of an old one, Minutemen and Minutewomen

Many barracks and many Army and Air Force housing establishments are shared with Britisher Selfridge Canteens, a company owned by Warshawsky.

Sky Trucks

WE IN Canada have known for some years that the trucking season, and in some circumstances the most efficient season, of transporting a cow, a man or a long drum to wilderness among camp is the airplane.

Not being militarily minded, few of us have realized that the airplane is also the quickest and in some circumstances the most efficient means of transporting a soldier and his weapons to battle.

We have learned to think of the airplane as a machine which fights in the air. We have yet to learn that it is also a machine which will carry a man to where he may want to fight on the ground.

This is unfortunate because there is even indication that the victorious armies in the war are going to be the armies which are equipped to move large numbers of troops, large quantities of weapons and supplies, by air.

Both Germany and France have used the military might placed at their disposal to further their aims, for example:

Russia invented the paratrooper. She launched mass training of glider pilots in 1908. She pioneered large-scale glider drops for supply and troop carrying. Soviet emissaries have passed a photograph showing eleven gliders in two behind a twin-engine plane. The Soviet Army's initial service was winged soldiers to evacuate wounded from the front.

Germany is expected to have in use no less over 18,000 cargo planes, 26,000 gliders. Dry trades earned 12,000 Germans to the company of Crete. As many as six gliders, each carrying twelve troops, were counted as a single tow train, which gave the tow unit a strength of nearly nine.

German reports claim that between June 17 and October 31 last year, cargo planes making 30,000 trips carried 41,000 tons of war material to the Russian front—reported to be about five times the freight carried by all aircraft, military or commercial in the United States during the whole of 1941.

German technical magazines recently reported designs for gliders carrying five and ten-ton trucks. Italian cargo planes have been flying disassembled short-range fighter planes from Italy to Libya.

Britain and the United States, both slow to realize the potentialities of the military organoplane, are now striving to catch up with their adversaries.

Britain has started to train pilots for troop-carrying gliders. An air-borne division has been created. Mr. Churchill announced recently that all glider troops, paratroopers and air-landing infantry were to be placed under one authority. Minister of Aircraft Production, J. J. Lennon, has stated that some bombers are being converted into transport planes.

It joins the U.S. set up an Air Transport Command to take over all air force ferrying and cargo carrying. The U.S. Army has ordered large numbers of Douglas and Curtiss transports. An air cargo connector is exploring the possibility of construction of 100-ton transport planes. Douglas currently is in use for about twenty-five tons! Parachute troops are being trained in large numbers. (Even the chaplain jumps in the UH-1 parachute corps.) The Army is using new plane passenger gliders in quantity, is experimenting with larger types. The first of twenty new Army glider schools graduated its first class of pilots early in July.

Some U.S. air experts are advocating the mass use of cargo planes to break the submarine blockade.

And what of Canada, the country which before the war boasted about carrying the world's largest volume of art treasure?

Responsible officials report that

1. We have no air force industry in Canada.
2. We are not training, nor have we any parachute troops in Canada.
3. We are not training military glider pilots in Canada. (There were being discussed in July.)
4. We have no military air transport service.

Stinson/Jackson never heard of sky trucks but he agrees that the way to win hatches is to "get there fastest with the mostest" is still true. Isn't it about time we began to catch on?

Party Government

VIGOROUS criticism of party government is voiced by Sir William Beveridge, one of Britain's oldest political economists, in an article in the Times of London. All-out war he says, demands a national government 'free of all party taints'.

"Since party organizations will be needed after the war they must be kept alive during the war, but our government should not be based on them. To do this is to appoint or retain leaders not because they are the best men for their work but because of their political episode and influence. To do this is to entrust the fortunes of the country to men of divided loyalty. Just because a party leader has responsibility for his party after the war he cannot even in war be single-minded."

¹ 'The war government should think ahead for the nation but not for itself, its members should look neither to their own future nor to those of their friends. They should be chosen for themselves, not for their parties, they should be a suicide club prepared to die pointedly that Britain and civilization may live.'

Then, would you get a man, you walk two miles up Pennsylvania Avenue in the early summer heat, hugging your gun, and abseiled the rear armor of government employees sailing in work at jobs that don't exist six months later, you begin to realize the size of the process which Washington encompasses.

And when you have failed to quiet unconsidered efforts in the west who are making it, you begin to demonstrate the world-wide scope of the revolution which is under way here.

The swelling economy in Washington is larger than ever in history, but what kind of

It is possible now, as it was not possible at the start of this year, to outline the plans for the revolution in 1969-1970 made by the Government of the United States. It is also possible to see that impossible to deny that this program is the last and only chance to prevent the triumph of the opposite program, known roughly as fascism. The program is submitted to the test of 1941, in fact, a counter-revolution against the fascist revolution which has succeeded on a large part of the world.

It is not, as many people imagine, a defensive posture—an attempt to save the status quo, the existing world, against the almost universal threat of the Soviet system. It is, on the contrary, a

Soviet Change

REFLECTS from the USSR collectors that there has been a radical change in the attitude of the Soviet regime to the "white-collar workers," or, as the Russians prefer to call them, the intelligentsia, according to a recent press release of the Canadian Council of International Affairs.

In the early days of the Revolution, the Soviet workers' movement was a good deal of suspicion as a potential worker of the new regime. Even in 1921, according to the Soviet press, a speech by leaders of the party stated that the intelligentsia was a "bourgeois element" and that the intelligentsia was a "bourgeois element" and that the intelligentsia was a "bourgeois element."

According to the 1959 census, the intelligentsia in the Soviet Union, which is not even 100 million people, is about 10,000,000 people. It is the largest group in the Soviet Union. It is the largest group in the Soviet Union. It is the largest group in the Soviet Union.
